

Poetry Series

Dancia Susilo
- poems -

Publication Date:
2016

Publisher:
Poemhunter.com - The World's Poetry Archive

Dancia Susilo(21 October 1998)

I have always struggled with the English language. I never felt confident in my writing or even in what I had to say. That changed four years ago, when I submitted my work to various employers, thinking the worst they could say was "no". To my surprise, they were eager to hire me. I became the youngest writer for Psych2Go. Since then, I have published articles with regard to the media industry as well as mental health.

Go Look

Go look for a world you call your own
Colour it with your own colours
Not necessarily your favourite colours
But colours that represent you.
Look for a world with shape
Shape it with your identity
Shape it with your subconscious
But leave the others be.
Look for a world with reality
Make it have your depth
Make it have your heights
But leave it to your flowing mind.
Look for a world that is you
Look for a world deep within your knowledge
Look for a world with its own emotions
Look for a world that is alive specially for you
What does this world look like?
More importantly..
What would you do with the world?
See, the world you created is yourself
This perfect world is your home.

(2013)

Dancia Susilo